- The Lepanto Institute updated that as of Sept. 2022, Food for the Poor has since removed their partnership with Jamaica Aids Support for Life once they learned that JASFL strongly promotes contraception.

- “Improving access to health care for pregnant mothers, educating families on preventing disease with good hygiene practices and bringing health care closer to rural communities are all part of the impact FFTP makes because of the support and sacrifice of its donors.”
- “For example, access to maternal health care for women can be tough to obtain. Some public health centers don’t have the staff, equipment or time to evaluate a mother properly. As a result, pregnant women and their children are put at an alarming risk for disease and even death. FFTP works to expand and build maternal health clinics in rural areas.”
- “Thanks to compassionate donors, women will have access to mammography, ultrasounds and scans; surgery including biopsies, lumpectomies and mastectomies; and other treatments such as chemotherapy and radiation therapy.”
 - o There is nothing about abortion or sexual education in their healthcare statements, financial forms, or on their website. There is also nothing about family planning or contraception.
