CURE International has a global partnership with Mercy Ships (for more information on Mercy Ships, visit all.org/charity-watchlist). This is what their partnership entails: "Mercy Ships and CURE International announced a partnership to provide specialized surgical care to children living with disabilities across the continent of Africa. Both organizations provide hope and healing to children living with disabilities through surgical care in under-resourced countries."

CURE International also partners with The Global Surgery Foundation. The announcement on Cure International's website says, "The GSF is a Switzerland-based organization anchored in the United Nations. Its mission is to accelerate and expand the provision of surgical care for attaining better health for all."

The article goes on to state the following:

The GSF and CURE International have committed to work collaboratively to further the global surgery agenda, specifically in developing innovative training, capacity-building, and service delivery programs. The collaboration will also include national surgical planning and a focus on sustainable development in global surgery and will extend to other joint projects of mutual interest, including fundraising, research, and organizing international conferences and symposia to raise the profile of global surgery.

In response to ALL's inquiry about their stance on the life issues, CURE International replied with following: "Thanks for reaching out. Here is more on our mission and values: <https://cure.org/mission-vision-and-values.>"
